Community Groups help contribute to a Communities Policy for Wales

The Welsh Government is developing a Communities Policy for Wales. To make sure that the policy reflects the needs of Wales, representatives of public organisations were invited by the Welsh and Anglesey Public Services Board to visit North Wales to get a flavour of what is going on in a community-based setting. As part of this work, Matthew Miles visited the community groups of Llangatwg to meet with their Third Sector and Public Services Board staff, as well as staff and councillors from Anglesey County Council, to all learn about their experiences of working with community groups, identifying what works well and exploring any challenges or barriers that they face in supporting community groups.
